Supplemental Information

Science, policy, and management of irrigation-induced selenium contamination in California

Matteo F. Kausch and Céline E. Pallud*

Department of Environmental Science, Policy, and Management, University of California, Berkeley, CA 94720

*Corresponding author; phone: 510-642-6359; e-mail: cpallud@berkeley.edu

Number of pages: 2
Number of figures: 1
Number of tables: 0
Selenium concentrations in the San Joaquin River below the confluence with the Merced River (Fig. 1). Concentrations are shown for the period from the beginning of the GBP (1996) to the most recent 2012 monitoring data provided by the US Bureau of Reclamation. Selenium concentrations can be seen to decrease on an annual average basis with seasonal peaks in the winter months.