ing abundant grass roots. Larch soils also are the most acidic, having a pH of 5.4 in the upper 4 in.

Acknowledgments

Thanks to Dr. Paul McDaniel of the University of Idaho, and Dr. R.C. Graham of the University of California, Riverside, who reviewed this manuscript and offered many helpful suggestions.

References

News and Announcements

1993 Joint Soil Conservation Service/Professional Soil Survey Association of California Annual Meeting

Terry D. Cook

The 1993 annual meeting was held jointly with the Soil Conservation Service (SCS) in Bakersfield, CA, 17-19 Mar. 1993. The theme was a Training Workshop on the “Changes and Additions in Soil Classification and the National Soil Handbook.” John Witty, National Leader for Soil Classification, National Soil Survey Center (NSSC), John Kimble, Research Chemist,